IELTS Model Academic Writing Task 1 Message: Circular Chart The following chart provides information on the percentage of household spending on essential goods in China for the years 1995 and 2011 Summarize the information by selecting and reporting the main characteristics and make comparisons where relevant. The two pie charts show differences in Chinese household spending in four essential categories. These categories are marked as percentages of total expenditure, with differences in expenditure for 1995 and 2011. Food and clothing remained the largest categories in both years, while medicines and household goods remained the smallest. However, over the years there were measurable changes in all four categories. Changes in the share of food and medicines in household budgets were particularly noticeable. The two main categories, clothing and food, were reduced during this 16-year period. Clothing lost just 1% of its share, going from 19% to 18%, while food dropped more dramatically, starting at 68% but losing 9 points of share for 2011. In both 1995 and 2011, medicine and household goods accounted for the lowest expenditure categories and the second lowest, respectively. Still, both gained a higher share of household spending in China for 2011. Medicine rose 7 points from 4% to 11%, while household items made a smaller but still noticeable increase from 9 to 12%. IELTS BARDS PIDA The pie charts below are shown Comparison of different types of energy production of France in two years. Source: Previous articles not created by IELTS Liz. The two pie charts illustrate the proportion of five types of energy production in France in 1995 and 2005. Overall, in both years, the most significant energy sources were gas and coal, which together accounted for more than half of energy production, while nuclear and other types of energy generated the smallest amount of energy in France. In all types of energy production, there was only a minimal change during the 10-year period. The energy produced by coal comprised 29.80% in the first year and this showed only a very slight increase from only about 1% to 30.9% in 2005. Similarly, in 1995, gas generated 29.63% which increased marginally to 30.1% 10 years later. With respect to the remaining methods of producing energy, there was an approximate 5% growth in the production of nuclear power and other sources to 10.10% and 9.10% respectively. Gasoline, on the other hand, was the only source of energy that decreased in production from 29.27% in 1995 to one-fifth (19.55%) in 2005.
